GOULD OBSERVES ITS CENTENNIAL

Gould Academy started its Centennial observance last Sunday with a baccalaureate address given by Rev. Hilda Ives of Portland. The girls' glee club gave two numbers at this occasion.

On Thursday, with fitting exercises, including an address by Gov. Louis J. Brann, Gould Academy observed its centennial. Thirty-seven pupils were tendered diplomas.

"Maine is fortunate," said Gov. Brann, "in the type and character of its educational institutions. Careers of education are valuable to the State. The only danger to State and Nation may arise from individuals educated to superimpose a wrong type of government but fortunately the people do not sanction such types. We are proceeding in State and Nation on the theory of a model of government based on the model of the Declaration of Independence."

Dr. Hanscom in well chosen remarks reviewed the progress and aims of Gould.

State Commissioner of Education Bertram Packard, also a speaker at the commencement banquet, declared "The Spirit of Gould" presented that morning by the students, truly depicted the spirit of modern education in America today. This is also the centennial of the black period of education in Maine when some academy charters even forbid the institutions to acquire property whose income produced over $2,000 annually but present day ambitions and ideas are for the better.

Leon V. Walker of Portland, an alumnus and trustee, said "I do not doubt that the founding of Gould meant sacrifice and doubtless today the academy is old enough to even participate in the Townsend Plan. Dr. Hanscom taught us to be thorough and reason soundly and there is more demand for such education today."

FIRE PROTECTION THE TOWN OF BETHEL SHOULD HAVE EFFICIENT FIRE PROTECTION!

It should be a pumper outfit of some type.

It should be completely equipped with a booster tank, tank, hose, ladders, etc.

It should be manned by a Town maintained fire company made up of available men enlisted from the Corporation fire companies.

DEFINITE ACTION IS NECESSARY AT ONCE!

Property is lost; your tax is raised; your home is endangered—by hesitation. It is up to the Town as a whole to maintain fire fighting equipment. The Corporation is, and should be willing to house it. The Corporation should and would, maintain a cart for emergency use in the village when the pumper is called away. There is no question of cooperation. The Corporation is in the Town and willing to share the Town burdens.

LET THE TOWN TAKE ACTION TO PREVENT LOSS OF MORE PROPERTY—NOW!

Show your interest by attending the Special Town Meeting to take action on fire protection, next Saturday.

ENMAN FARM HOME LOST; $10,000 BLAZE

Mayville Buildings Burn Saturday Morning — Help From Rumford

The farm home of Henry Enman in Mayville was burned to the ground in a fire discovered about 10 a. m. Saturday. When discovered by Owen Richards, Mr. Enman's son-in-law, the fire had made little progress and evidently started in the attic floor. A garden hose and bucket brigade nearly conquered the blaze for a short time, but it was impossible to control. Rumford fire department was called and hose was laid by the Bethel firemen to the road where the Rumford outfit connected and drove to the river where there was an excellent location for the pumper below the bridge. However by the time the pumper arrived the barn was ablaze and their efforts only prevented the spread of the blaze. Of the set of buildings only a blacksmith shop nearby remains standing.

The buildings included a two and one-half story house, ell, shed, stable, and large barn. The place was owned by Baker Thurston until six years ago when Mr. Enman of Upton bought it. Occupying the house with Mr. and Mrs. Enman were a son-in-law, Owen Richards, and family and John Fuller and family. The Fullers suffered heavily, as much of their furniture was stored in the attic. Besides furniture the loss of the Enman and Richards families included a large quantity of logging equipment and supplies and eight or ten tons of hay. The buildings were of the old fashioned type and unusually well constructed. The loss is estimated at $10,000 with partial insurance.

NEWS of the WEEK

N. Y.'s No. 1 Enemy Convicted

New York —Charles ("Lucky") Luciano, dubbed by Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey one of the nation's most dangerous racketeers, was convicted with eight confederates on 62 counts of compulsory prostitution. All face long prison terms, two of them for life as old offenders. Four more of the gang had already pleaded guilty and were brought from prison to testify for the State.

Liberal Planks Demanded

Cleveland, O.—Liberal elements within the Republican Party will make a determined fight for liberalized social and economic planks in the platform to be adopted by the National Convention now in session. Many go so far as to echo the suggestion of Ex-President Hoover that even the Constitution might be changed, "if necessary" to give the States control over wages and working conditions.

Lewis Routs A. F. of L.

Washington, D. C.—John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers of America, out-generalled the American Federation of Labor in its scheme to unionize the 450,000 workers in the steel industry. Instead of the A. F. of L. policy of separate craft unions for each type of work, Lewis will attempt, through his new Committee for Industrial Organization, to organize steel men into a huge industry-wide union.

EDDY BROS. CIRCUS COMING

Features Major Bowes' Amateurs

Folks, Monday, June 15th, will be Circus Day in Bethel—and WHAT a circus! Besides the wild animals, clowns, trapeze performers, etc.—all performing feats of daring and skill—the Eddy Bros. Circus brings a unit composed of Major Bowes' and Fred Allen's Amateur Radio Hour stars. This amateur unit features the celebrated one-legged buck and wing dancer, Hal Christie, from Philadelphia. Hal was featured in Ripley's Believe It or Not. In coast-to-coast broadcasts, and he also has the honor and distinction of winning 190 consecutive dancing contests.

Also featured are: Sylvia Adams the Blues and Torch Singer; Tex Van Wagner from Laredo, Texas—Tex, by the way, was featured in Fred Allen's Town Hall program; Frances Page the rhythm and musical comedy star. Miss Page was winner of Hal Roach's Screen Test in 1935, she was selected from 2500 contestants as having the most perfect time to rhythm—Edgar Verner of Washington, D. C., formerly on Ray Perkins' Feenamint Hour, is an impersonator extraordinary. Mr. Verner impersonates over 50 different birds, animals, etc., as well as taking complete parts from the better known radio programs, impersonating stage, screen and radio stars without any mechanical aid.

All this, mind you, is in addition to the regular show under the Big Top, so come on out folks and make it a holiday for all.

LOCAL GARDEN CLUB JOINS STATE FEDERATION

At the regular meeting of the Garden Club of Bethel on June 10, 22 members were present and four new names were added, bringing the membership of the Club to between 65 and 70. Mrs. D. T. Durrell, Mrs. W. C. Garey, Mrs. Leroy Hamlin and Mrs. Joseph Maddocks became the new members.

Fred Merrill sent to the president a bunch of pink and red peonies the first from his garden. He also gave gladiolus bulbs to be given to members desiring them.

The plans for the flower show to be held Wednesday, Aug. 19 are progressing rapidly. Rules for this show and classes of exhibits will be printed later. Many members are planning to go to Portland Wednesday, June 17, to visit Mrs. Tobie's iris gardens. All those not present at the last meeting and who wish to go and who have cars should fill them with those who have no way. Those who have no car let Mrs. Chapman know at an early hour so that arrangements can be made. The date for the talk on peonies by Mr. Moulton is to be June 23 at Garland Chapel at 7:30 p. m.

The Club is now a member of "The Garden Club Federation of Maine" as was learned today. The next regular meeting of the Club will be held at Mrs. Chapman's at 2:30 Wednesday, July 15. Members should make a good effort to be present as the flower show business will need much attention as well as work from its members.

P. P. Crane is in East Machias this week.

BETHEL NEEDS

More and Better Sidewalks—winter and summer
Night Watchman—All the Year
Rural Fire Protection
Enforced Traffic Rules

The townspeople and younger alumni were much saddened last Thursday afternoon to learn that Percy F. Crane, who for the past five years has been the popular senior-master of Gould Academy, is not to return next fall. Coming here from a ten years principalship of Washington Academy, he was well fitted to meet any problem in his work here, and it was the hope and expectation of many of the friends of Gould that the old school would benefit from his ability as a teacher and executive for many years to come.

Mr. Crane's vigorous interest in his classes and school activities will long be remembered by the students of Gould during his stay. He had a keen appreciation of young people's interests and a sympathy with their problems. Under his leadership the Y. M. C. A. and winter sports events have made great progress.
Outside the Academy life his interests extended to the Lions Club and the Boy Scouts, in which he ably served as a member of the troop committee and was foremost in establishing the Court of Honor.
In his departure the town loses a citizen of ability, whose sincerity of purpose and unselfish devotion to his chosen work have endeared him to friends without number.

We wish there were more like him.

Poor Little Fellow

Flag Day, 1936

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman

Sentinel of the Republic

"The work that we do is the making of the flag."

America, as this is written, is preparing for its annual and reverent celebration of Flag Day.

From every public building, from millions of private homes, will fly the standard which has been the symbol of American valor and of American love of freedom through a century and a half of glorious history.

What is America doing today to perpetuate those qualities—valor into the flag by the strength and the courage of our fathers?

Are our politicians preaching valor
when they urge the sons of pioneers to deny their own initiative, their own self-reliance, and to turn instead to a centralized government for direction, for ideas and for support?

Are the new economic prophets preaching love of freedom when they ask our people to relinquish their constitutional right to govern themselves, so it may be delivered into the hands of temporary officeholders and bureaucrats?

The men and women who braved both danger and hardship to carry the flag across a continent wouldn't have thought so. Few Americans who love personal liberty and independence would think so today. If they did, our flag would lose its meaning.

Franklin K. Lane once personified the American flag as speaking thus to an humble worker:

"I am your belief in yourself, your dream of what a people may become . . .

"I am all that you hope to be, and here the courage to try for . . .

"I am the Constitution and the Courts, statutes and the statute-makers, advice and dreadnought, counselor and clerk . . .

"I am the clutch of an idea, and the reasoned purpose of resolution . . .

"I am what you make me, nothing more."

We know what our fathers made the flag. Can we afford to nullify their labors?

GOULD CENTENNIAL

The school cup, presented by the class of 1925 to the class making the highest scholastic average went to the senior class. The freshmen took second place.

Membership in the National Honor Society went to Chester Wheeler of West Bethel, valedictorian; Ellis Davis and Rosalind Rowe of Bethel and Alfred Lovejoy of West Bethel.

Rosalind Rowe of Bethel, Persis Adams of Hartford, and Dorothy Linnell of Gorham, Maine, won the athletic awards for the maximum number of points.

Commencement exercises were held in the gymnasium which was decorated with class banners.

In his opening remarks Dr. Hanscom retold some of the interesting history of the school.

C. Park, one of the trustees, delivered the senior gift to the class, a reproduction of "Sir Richard the Deliverer," which was presented by Miss Alice L. Tyler of the graduating class.

Honored by Alumni and students were Mrs. William Holmes of Los Angeles, Calif., herself an alumna of the school, mother of eight graduates and grandmother of two. Mrs. James came from California to attend the exercises, her first visit in years.

Commencement dinner for over 100 people was enjoyed under a tent erected on the campus. Mr. Thurston of Bethel, a graduate of 1906, acted as toastmaster. The Rev. Edwin L. Wilson of South Portland, class of 1917, offered prayer.

The following letter was read by Master Thurston:

The New Ocean House
Swampscott, Massachusetts
June 1, 1936

the Class of 1936.

Old Academy, Bethel, Maine.
Another year has rolled around another graduating class makes its debut. To this class we wish to present our earnest congratulations and our best wishes for the future of its members.

This is also a Centennial year; it is a great source of satisfaction to us that this anniversary finds Gould so splendidly equipped materially and possessed of such a corps of loyal and devoted teachers.

The past forty years of the history of this school have been made one man, Dr. F. E. Hanscom. His sports as a young man, newly graduated to a practically defunct school, saved the school from oblivion, and encouraged its friends to his magnificent example as a teacher to bring aid in time, to save a school that was, and build the best that is. To him and to his teachers goes all the credit for this.

It is with the deepest sense of gratitude for and appreciation of his magnificent life-work that we watch him pass on the torch of education to a younger man to whom his record will always be a splendid stimulus to give, as has he, without stint the best that is in him.

CLASS ODE

Rosalind Mellic Rowe

Farewell, dear Gould, our path leads out today
Through thy fair portals, to life's broad highway,
Four happy years have all too swiftly flown,
In loyal hearts deep love for thee has grown.
Dear, faithful teachers, ever kind and true,
Love and deep gratitude we leave with you.
Classmates, no more we'll gather as of old;
But memory's pages each dear face will hold.

Now we must leave the halls of dear old Gould,
Where high ideals a century have ruled
Though far we roam the busy ways of men,
Be thou our mentor, till we meet again.

Farewell, dear Gould, a fond farewell to thee,
Thine honored name our pride through life shall be,
Our motto still, "To Thine Own Self Be True"
Loyal forever, to the Gold and Blue.

TRIBUTE TO DR. F. E. HANSCOM

New England has long been called the Switzerland of America. Where can you find a more striking example than Bethel, in Oxford County. Oxford County is a natural park of beauty and loveliness. Lofly mountains, silvery rivers, lovedly lakes. Beautiful winding roads dotted along beside with farms and pastoral fillages.

Here it was—soon after the Revolutionary War—that the best blood of Massachusetts—pure English stock—made their way to Oxford County. They had very little except their splendid characters, brave hearts and honest hard working hands. What sturdy English names—the Hoimeses, Loringes, Emerys, Chapmans, Goulds, Twitells, Masons, Mitchells, Halls, Hamlins, Aldens, Whitmans, Morton and hundreds more. These families fought adverse circumstances but these Puritan fathers and mothers founded a civilization whose praise is heard the world over.

Set like gems among the lofty mountains the wonderful buildings that now compose Gould Academy, face the valley of the Androscoggin.

On June 4th, an old alumna came back to witness one of the finest graduation exercises ever to be given by the students of old G. A.

The pageant "The Spirit of Gould" was wonderfully portrayed. Every phase of school activity featured in a striking way. The boys and girls participating were splendid examples of true manhood and womanhood.

Such quiet dignity pervaded. The soul of the man who for forty years has guided the destinies of Gould Academy seemed to be reflected through their every movement.

In the old days the quotation, "To thine own self be true" used to face the pupils in the Assembly Hall. One alumna said, "Why, I thought I believed in a Higher Power but after my year at Gould, I didn't think, I knew."

Every member of the Alumni of Gould Academy is justly proud of her achievements. It seems only fitting at this time to pay tribute to our esteemed and beloved principal, Dr. F. E. Hanscom. John Ruskin's words seem to express what we would say—

"When we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for the present delight, nor for the present use alone; let it be such work as our descendants will thank us on stone, that a time is to come for and let us think, as we lay stone when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them, and that men will say as they look upon the labor and wrought substance of them, See, this our Fathers did for us."

GIRL OF THE MOMENT

By R. H. WILKINSON

© Associated Newspapers, WNU Service.

BEING from the West, Gladys could not be expected to know of Ruy Winslow's fame, either as a football hero—or a Romeo.

The day after her arrival, Creighton played Fletcher, a nearby institution that had long cherished dreams of challenging up a victory over the local school. It was a hard-fought game, Creighton won, but only by virtue of the skill of Ruy Winslow, who scored the deciding touchdown in the last two minutes of play with a 50-yard run.

That night at the victory ball, Gladys and Ruy were introduced. They danced together four times running. During intermission they left the gym and strolled out onto the athletic field and sat down on the tier of bleachers. It was clear and warm, with the smell of fall in the air. They sat for a long time without speaking. Finally Gladys said, attempting a lightness she did not feel: "How does it seem to be a great football hero, with a whole college at your feet?"

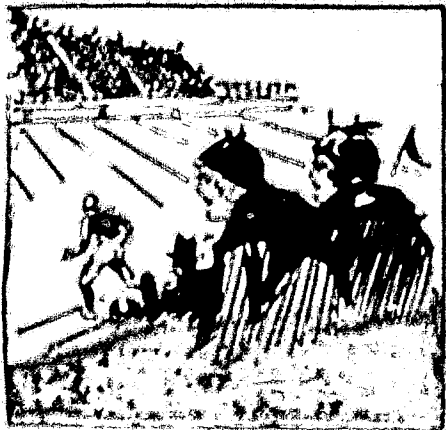

"Not so good," said Ruy, honestly. "I'm not kidding myself that it means anything. Fifty miles from Creighton no one's ever heard of me. I play only because I like to play."

Which was what Gladys wanted to hear him say. She was silent, conscious of a curious sense of delight, of thrilling apprehension. And when, presently, he took her into his arms, she yielded, lifted up her lips to be kissed.

Gladys prolonged her visit. She prolonged it because she couldn't bear to leave Ruy. For the first time in her life she was completely, deliciously happy.

Margot Garrison, whom Gladys was visiting, sensed that her friend's regard for the great Ruy Winslow was more than superficial. Realizing it, Margot took it upon herself to perform a disagreeable but dutiful task. After the dance which followed the Martineville game, she came into Gladys' room and sat down on the bed beside her chum.

"Gladys, I'm going to tell you something because I'm your best friend and I think you ought to know. It was probably just the usual thing. I go on. "If you love me enough—not to play in the Stanboro game next Saturday, if I asked you not to?" He laughed. "Let's cut the kidding, darling. I've more important things to talk about."

"I'm not kidding. I mean it. I don't want you to play Saturday."

"Listen, sweet, you're not serious. Stanboro's the biggest game of the season. They're depending on me. It'll be my last chance to play for Creighton."

"Which is exactly why I'm asking you not to—K you love me."

Ruy stared. He was puzzled, scornful. "So that's it? They hired you to come down here—to make love to me and to ask me not to play against them? It's all clear—"

"Is it? If you think that, you don't love me! Otherwise, you'll have faith enough in my regard for you to do as I ask without demanding an explanation. We'll let this be a test—of your love for me and mine for you."

The stands were packed that Saturday. This was an important day at Creighton, and the surrounding countryside. It was a gay crowd, enthusiastic, excited, thrilled with the prospect of seeing Ruy Winslow in his last college football game. Sitting with the Garrisons, Gladys' lips were close pressed, her cheeks a shade whiter than usual.

Presently a whistle sounded. Out onto the field came the Creighton boys, greeted by a wild roar of applause. Gladys grew tense. She strained forward—and a great wave of relief and joy surged through her. Ruy was not among the eleven Creighton players who were lining up.

At the half, Stanboro was ahead 13-7. Creighton fans were meaning, yelling for Ruy Winslow. And then suddenly a mighty cheer rent the air. A player, tugging at his helmet, suddenly appeared from the sidelines. It was Ruy Winslow!

There is no need to go into details about the remainder of the game. Suffice it to say that Ruy carried the ball over for the tying touchdown, and kicked the winning point. He was carried off the field in a state of glory.

That evening on the lower tier of the bleachers, Gladys looked up into Ruy's face and smiled brightly. "Oh, darling, I knew you wouldn't tell me. I knew the things they said weren't true. That's why I came down here—the half and asked you to play."

And Ruy, looking her into the arms, smiled brightly. He looked this girl—Gladys—over her N.

women. It's clever of him. The girl of the moment thinks he's being honest, that his love is sincere, else he wouldn't make the confession." Margot stood up. "Well, there it is, darling."

Gladys didn't sleep much that night. She tried not to think or lend credence to what Margot had said—and failed. The next day she remained alone, thinking it over. Margot, of course, had been trying to be kind. Gladys didn't believe that Ruy Winslow was merely having an affair with her.

Yet there was a doubt. There would always be a doubt—until Margot's warning was proved wholly unjustified.

Two days later Ruy came up to spend the evening. The Garrisons were out. Ruy, kissing Gladys, sensed that something was wrong. He held her off and stared into her eyes. She returned his look evenly. "Ruy, do you love me more than anything else in the world?"

"You know that, sweetness. I'll always love you."

"Do you love me enough—not to play in the Stanboro game next Saturday, if I asked you not to?" He laughed. "Let's cut the kidding, darling. I've more important things to talk about."

need, he thought, to cast a shadow over their lives by telling her that it had been Coach Brady who had kept him out during the first half, saving him, for what it would take in the third and fourth quarters to bring Creighton victory.

Where Salt Is More Precious Than Gold

An arab trailing across the parched waste of the Sahara carries a little bag of dirty white powder, which he values as highly as his water-skin. Every year hundreds of Tibetans leave their lonely homes on "The Roof of the World" and brave the hazards of a 9,000-foot descent down blizzard-swept mountains in order to toll back with a few pounds of the same substance. In many places a sack of it is riches, and a plump in Central Africa will exchange his wealth for a teaspoonful, or murder you for it if there is no other way of getting it. What is this strange commodity that they risk their lives to obtain? Something we can buy here for a penny a pound, yet a million times more precious than gold—common salt. Nobody, unless they have been in a country where it is scarce, can understand the terrible craving for it.

Few people realize that it is because the white man's blood is so line that cannibals consider him such a delicacy; or that the superstition connected with the spilling of salt is a distant echo of some country where to waste it was indeed a crime. In the East a man who eats another man's salt, at his table blinds his honor to do him injury.

At certain seasons the American buffalo used to stampede in vast herds, driven by some blind instinct to parts of the ranges where the earth threw up salt. In the forests of Central and South America, and parts of India, may be seen deep pits and grooves gouged out of the solid rock face. They are the tongue marks of millions of animals who since time began have licked out the life-giving salt.

In Europe there is so much salt that in many cases mines are only worked for a few months of the year; yet sometimes we are salt starved, says "Tit-Bits Magazine." Much of the salt which reaches us is so highly refined that it lacks minute traces of certain chemicals. That is why the waters of famous spas are so valuable. But chemists have compressed into tablet form the vital qualities they yield. If the new medicinal product is successful we will be able to take a health spa cure in our own homes.

CHANGING COUNTRY CHURCH IN NEW ENGLAND

by C. M. McConnell

Is New England Rural?

Two million people live in the open country and village communities of less than 2500 in population in the six New England states. The United States census classifies this group as farm and non-farm and calls it rural to distinguish it from the urban group. Forty-three and eight-tenths per cent of the total population of the United States is rural while in New England the rural percentage is about half that, or to be exact 22.7. This rural group is right now the fastest growing population in New England. Farms in Massachusetts increased 20% last year.

There are areas in this section—namely Northern Vermont, the Aroostook County of Maine, the Connecticut Valley and the Nashoba fruit belt of Massachusetts, which are as agricultural as anything in the United States and as productive as the best land that lies out of doors. On the back roads and isolated, semi-abandoned sections, there is a mixture of old native white stock and newer immigrant waging a warfare with nature for a livelihood which rivals anything in the United States for grim and weary labor against heavy odds of soil, climate and "other acts of God."

Rural Churches in New England

It is in this rural New England that 2500 town and country churches are located. They dot the hill-sides of the open country or nestle among the village trees, usually fronting the common, sometimes in battle array ready to carry on the fight for some denomination. How goes the battle with these 2500 churches which may be classified as major social institutions? Are these churches doomed or dying, alive or dead, going forward or backward, or merely hanging on like frozen apples clinging to leafless trees in November? Who knows and what of it? Who cares and why?

Some Standards of Measurement

The standards of measurement of religious progress are so varied that few are reliable. It is however possible to get some idea of the church's standing as an institution by considering membership, support and response to its program of service on the part of the community to which it ministers. New England has three-fifths of its adult population enrolled as church members. Of the New England States, Rhode Island and Connecticut have 72.6% of their adult population enrolled in church. Massachusetts has 62.5%, while Vermont and New Hampshire have only 51.4%. The tendency here is that church membership is highest where farm land is most abundant and where the population is stable. The church prospers most where the people are anchored to the locality by reason of a stake in the land. A comparison of rural and urban church expenditures per capita shows New England spending $17.65 in the city and $12.10 in the country. Only one out of ten in the country is a church member. This is the statistical staff of one of the churches which has receded from service. Now Mrs. Ives is President of the New England Town and Country Church Commission and since the founding of the Mayflower Dying Denominational Competition in Rural New England.

Peter Anstee once called this situation "The Grand Old Religion." Dickens examples of society, needless and un-Christian competition may be cited in New England. There are puny, blighted and enfeebled rural churches and villages of religious organization which block Christian fellowship and goodwill throughout New England.

There is a town in New England which once had a population of 1000 and now has 300. Two churches were organized between 1785 and 1790. For 45 years one church had no resident minister and the other church has never had a resident full-time minister. Services are held in each church by ministers from afar—one minister drives seven miles from a nearby town to preach to a half dozen people, one of whom is a resident member. The other boasts of a minister who is doing "a remarkable piece of work" He drives a distance of 20 miles from the city, arrives at 10:40 and leaves at 12:30 for his home, and a dinner enroute.

Ten years ago a forlorn church in a town of a thousand with three other churches joined another church. For seven years there was peace. Then came an enterprising denominational leader who saw this abandoned temple of worship and grew peeved at someone's apostasy.

"What ho," shouted this crusader. He recalled the half dozen members back from their exodus and reorganized them into a church society with a retired minister drafted for this emergency. Later a student took up the burden of reorganization and carried on the work begun by the old veteran minister who had returned to the wars. "Come on, boys, we are going back," should be his slogan. How far back only those who believe in cooperation can tell.

Larger Parishes in New England

New England is contributing examples of progressive rural church activity to the world in its larger parishes. The map of Maine is dotted by a dozen larger parishes. The names are intriguing: Aroostook, South West Harbor, Mount Desert, Mount Blue, Saco Valley, Oxford County, Western Maine, Sebago Lake, Presumpscot, Umbagog! What a group of parishes for any state to contribute to cooperation among rural churches!

The leaders of these parishes are men and women who know their task to its last detail of practical activity and out to the edge of its philosophy. This is no handful of defeated individualists who are trying to hatch out some new scheme to prolong the life of a forlorn hope of denominationalism hanging on by the grace of a gift of hymn books or missionary aid. These workers have been trained for their tasks by universities and by experience on larger parish staffs as apprentices. Some of that killing faculty which undercuts the efforts and spirit of every lonely worker on a competing field is noticeable in this group. They have the zeal of crusaders for a cause that offers hope to communities now languishing for religious services that embody cooperation both in theory and practice. The reports of these parish workers read like a chapter from the Book of Acts.

But to mention larger parishes and interdenominational cooperation in New England and not mention Hilda Ives would be heresy. Up in a region northwest of Portland there is a group of five of the State of Maine's larger parishes and the origin of these larger parishes can be traced back to the pastorate of Hilda Ives at Albany. When she was chosen pastor of this neglected church at a salary of $250 a year, one of the head men of that defunct church greeted her with the dirge: "Well you are here to anchor the locality by reason of a stake in the land. A comparison of rural and urban church expenditures per capita shows New England spending $17.65 in the city and $12.10 in the country. Only one out of ten in the country is a church member. This is the statistical staff of one of the churches which has receded from service. Now Mrs. Ives is President of the New England Town and Country Church Commission and since the founding of the Mayflower Dying Denominational Competition in Rural New England.

A true religious cooperative, called the Associated Commission for the development of the Rural Church in New England is at work to change the church to meet the changing country conditions of New England. The two commissions which constitute this newly organized organization are The New England Town and Country Church Commission and the Interseminary Commission for Training for the Rural Ministry. For seven years at work along cooperative interdenominational lines and have slowly but surely established themselves along progressive rural church lines.

They have accepted the challenge of the late Kenyon J. Butterfield, formerly President of the New England Town and Country Church Commission which he threw out to work "a remarkable piece of work" He drives a distance of 20 miles from the city, arrives at 10:40 and leaves at 12:30 for his home, and a dinner enroute.

Christian forces of the world than that the church take command of the task of developing and maintaining an adequate, and therefore a Christian, rural civilization."

TRYING TO LOSE WATCH THE NIBBLE

Between Meal Snacks Mean Extra Pounds Unless they are "Walked off"

Think well before you nibble between meals. That's the advice given folks who want to lose pounds, by Hazel M. Hauck of the New York state college of home economics. And it even applies, she says, to such little things as a jelly bean, a fig newton, a salted peanut, a piece of mince pie, and a lime drop.

"The between-meal snacks may be tempting, but they furnish a lot of energy that should be used, or else—"

To show the energy value of some common between-meal foods in terms of the number of miles a person would have to walk to use up the energy provided by them, Miss Hauck cites these figures:

"For eating one caramel, five-sevenths of a mile is needed to 'walk it off'; for one jelly bean; one-tenth of a mile; for a five-cent bar of milk chocolate, four miles; for a graham cracker, five-sevenths of a mile.

"For an ice cream sundae, five to seven miles; for one doughnut, two and four-fifths miles; for one salted peanut, one-eleventh of a mile; for one sliced ham sandwich, from two and one-half to three and one-half miles; for one piece of mince pie four and one-half inches at the circumference, six and one-half miles; and for one cup of popcorn without butter, though you probably don't eat it that way, one mile.

The figures she gives are for a person weighing 150 pounds would walk two and a half miles an hour thereby using seventy calories a mile. The account of energy used not walking but the energy also maintain body functions, the work of heart and lungs, energy to sit at rest as to the rate indicated," Miss Hauck says. "Hence, if your diet contains enough calories for the maintenance of body 'snacks' are eaten in addition would have to walk twice as the distances mentioned as the ordinary activities to gain weight.

"If you have been accustomed to eating between meals, take of water or a cup of tea or to relieve that empty feeling help resist temptation when become used to three meals a day.

"Also, stop eating when you would still enjoy a little. Overweight people need to eat less. Take the man who said 'One of the exercises for reducing is ones self away from the table times a day.'

The alfalfa snout beetle, a ly discovered pest believed confined to two central New counties, is challenging the scientific forces the Empire can muster. Because of the area now affected, agriculturalists hope to nip in the bud potential threat to millions of alfalfa.

BIG SUMMER TRADE PREDICTED FOR MAINE

Maine Development Commission officials said today that "every indication" points to the certainty that this will be by far the state's biggest recreational year since 1929.

The unprecedented number of out-of-state anglers in Maine this spring, advance bookings at beach and lake resorts which are far in excess of previous years, a greater amount of inquiries received in response to new paper and magazine advertising, and a larger number of summer visitors in the state at the present time were some of the reasons advanced for the prediction, it was said.

With the 2,500 lakes and 5,000 streams in the state yielding what has been described as "the best fishing in thirty years," Maine guides have been busier this year than any before in their experience, it was revealed.

Hotels and sporting camps in many parts of the state report that with the spring fishing season only half over they have already accommodated more visiting anglers than since predepression days.

Bookings at hotels and resorts for the summer season are from 50% to 200% over those of last year.

Cottage rentals in all sections of the state show the greatest advance in over six years.

With salmon and trout fishing promising to remain at high pitch for over a month more and bass fishing in the over 400 lakes containing these fish just beginning, camp and hotel proprietors were preparing today to handle a still greater influx of anglers than during any previous year.

Inquiries from every state in the Union, from Canada, and from a number of foreign countries are pouring into the Commission offices in unprecedented numbers, it was said.

Several conventions of major importance including that of the National Editorial Association in June, the North Eastern Poultry Producers Council in August and that of the Committee of One Hundred in September will be held in Maine this year.

MAGAZINE PREDICTS NOMINATION OF BRIDGES AS VICE PRESIDENT

That Governor H. Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire, will receive the Republican nomination for Vice-President is predicted by Laurie Hillyer, staff writer, in the May issue of Yankee, the New England Magazine, published at Dublin, N. H. The writer says, "A vice president is frequently the evolution of a governor (preferably a barefoot governor) and there are very few Republican governors for questing Republicans to find. Aside from Landon, of Kansas, and Bridges of New Hampshire, there are only six Republicans to be had—from California, Delaware, Maryland, Michigan, New Jersey and Vermont. It is generally conceded that the Republicans would like a presidential nominee from the West and a vice-presidential nominee from New England."

The article traces the rise of Governor Bridges from an orphan farm boy in Maine to the governor's chair.

The Just Man

The just man is not he who does no man an injury, but he who, being able to inflict it, does not wish to do so; nor yet is it the man who, abstained from seizing petty gains, but who determines not to lay hold of great possessions, when he might do so, and might hold them with impunity; nor is it the man who observes all these things, but who, endowed with a noble and ingenious disposition, wishes to be just, and not more.

Sunday School at 10 o'clock.

Services Sunday morning at 10:45.

"God The Preserver of Man" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 14.

The Golden Text is: "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness" (Isaiah 41:10).

Among the citations from the Bible is the following: "Therefore take no thought saying What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6: 31, 32).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science Textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "In divine Science, man is sustained by God the divine Principle of being. The earth, at God's command brings forth food for man's use. Knowing this, Jesus once said: 'Take ye thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink?'—presuming not on the prerogative of his creator, but recognizing God, the Father and Mother of all, as able to feed and clothe man as He doth the lilies" (Page 506: 6-12).
